However Did It Happen to Me ?

by Rosine de Bounevialle.

"The Cause" I mean: I was twenty-three years old when "we" declared war on Germany, and only partially bemused by the Churchillian rhetoric but like most of my contemporaries, was prepared to "starve and endure". I remember saying to my mother; "Oh! How ghastly - we are going to have years of separation and rationing, and there will be another generation of "old maids like last time". This, on that fateful Sunday, the third of September, 1939, which shows how blind and selfish we had become since "The war to end wars" had paused at the provocative provisions of the Treaty of Versaillles. Yet, I had no excuse for such gullibility.

I had been born and reared in what are so paradoxically called 'Roman' Catholic circles; my parents had long realised what con-trickers or ignorant tools were the majority of party politicians, and now ignored them. My father was an engineer of genius who had twice been robbed of what should have been his just return for the results of his techological expertise, which had established both his pre-and-post war employers in their "big bithnithess". The second of these cheats, he sued for compensation but lost his claim although the defendant was alluded to in court by his own counsel, as: "My discredited witness".

After that, he determined never to be an employee again. With the willing aid and co-operation of his wife, our mother, he successfully established his family in a business property of their own - after long and ultimately successful battles with banks and local and national authorities who, as ever, did everything they could to stamp out such individual enterprise and thus prevent "escapees" from the rooted "wage-slave" society in which the vast majority clung to their "respectable" chains.

When I was eighteen, "living at home", and my brother, three years older, was employed in the Aeronautical Inspection Department with a firm in Luton, Bedfordshire, my parents, longing for life in the country turned our three storied house into as many self contained flats and found tenants for them and for the business which consisted of a petrol filling station, repair shop and twenty five lock up garages. The income from the whole enabled us to lease a modest house in Sussex. Ifield Wood, held a small eccentric community three miles from Crawley, the county capital, and there, we continued to lead a somewhat "out of this world" existence until the arrival on that peaceful scene of a septuagenerian celebrity who was known to everyone except us as the "pre-war" owner/editor of the famous and eminently controversial newspaper called The Winning Post, the forthright defender in libel actions brought by J.B. Joel (a South African Jewish race horse owner whose fortune derived from illicit diamond buying) and erstwhile friend of Dukes and Princes. Not surprisingly my parents thought he was a bit above "our touch" and so did not join the queue to call on him. However, curiousity (I suppose) at last made him call on us, when we found we were more like-minded than any others of the neighbours.

He gave us copies of his autobiography which we devoured with avidity - no wonder this man's unique contributions to the "Sport of Kings" have now been "sunk without trace" in the time dishonoured manner with which we nationalists have become familiar when studying the lives of those who have had the temerity to defy or even to disagree with the heirs of the "Hollowcost" when they are set on some course detrimental to the well-being of our un chosen race.

As children, my brother and I had from the age-of reason, been "baby gamblers" read "racing" papers and put our sixpences (a week's pocket-money) on selected quadrupeds via "the milkman" who acted as a bookmaker's "runner" so when Bob (everyone called him "Bob") asked me if I would like to go to the races with him, I accepted with alacrity and became in very short time his "runner" and general factotem on at least four days a week in Tattersalls rings on every race course in the south of England with occasional excursions to Chester and Liverpool. So not only did I learn about horses, owners, trainers and who owned what and who was a sportsman and who was not - I understood what Bob was "on" about: J.B. Joel and his like were turning a sport into "bithneth" - the "big bithneth" it has since, become in which sportsmen devoted to horse owning, training and racing for the love of it find themselves pawns in a kind of equine stock exchange - well, that was the beginning, now, of course, the industry has gone elsewhere with all others. So Bob was almost alone in his day. He dared to wage an effective campaign against the upstarts who threatened to turn his beloved sport into the cut-throat business it has since become and gone to Japan, Saudi Arabia or wherever.

The result of his relentless "one man" war conducted in his own paper The Winning Post is, that, if today his name is known at all among members and followers in the horse-racing world, it is, infamous, as; "The man who 'pulled' Sceptre in the Derby." The Derby of 1902 that was.... the relentless power of "The Chosen" who, undoubtedly, control the means of mass communication is such that this remarkable man who achieved a once and for all quadruple success in the English Classic races and only narrowly missed making it an unbeatable record by winning all five, became traduced as as a cheat who " pulled" the favorite in that now long ago Derby. The ongoing power of such defamers is only revealed when the figures and events in the classic races of those times are recalled in supposedly factual records in prestigious magazines today. "Racing" history is found to contain the same biased distortions as any other "history" when some intrepid character has incurred the displeasure of the "little lords" of money creation.

Sceptre was a "lot" in the 1900 "breakdown sale" of the then late Duke of Westminster's race horses. She was a yearling filly by Persimmon out of Ornament (own sister to the mighty Ormonde) which was about as high in equine aristocracy as you can get. Bob Sievier fell in love with her on sight; he was also a notable gambler - he acquired her after an unprecedented bid of 10,000 guineas (a huge amount then and almost unimaginable today!), which was scoffed at by the pundits as a case of "a fool and his winnings are soon parted." Instead, to the chagrin of the likes of jealous Joels, Sievier trained her himself at his establishment at Shrewton on Salisbury Plain and raced her with success as a two year-old. She was, of course, "entered" for all five 1902 Classic races for three year olds: ie, The Two Thousand Guineas for colts and fillies; the One Thousand Guineas for fillies only, both run within two days of each other over a mile course at the Newmarket Spring meeting. Sceptre won them both. She next appeared at the Summer meeting on Epsom Downs when, in those days, the Derby Trial Stakes was run over one mile and a half on the second day of the meeting, Wednesday, followed two days later (Friday) by The Oaks for fillies only, run over the same mile and a half course as in the Derby. Tragically, for Bob, she refused to accelerate after running wide round Tattenham Corner and was passed on the "run in" and finished in fourth place. In retrospect, there was no doubt in Sievier's mind that it was due to the jockey's (Randall) failure to follow his riding instructions which were to hold Sceptre up and make the supreme effort when "in the straight." Since she had been almost "all out" from the start and had always before been "nursed" round bends, she so resented this unprecedented treatment she gave up trying at all in "the straight". Even so she was fourth. After recovering from his speechless rage, Sievier gave Randall the benefit of the doubt as to whether he had been "bought", and put his failure to obey "instructions" down to "big race nerves". Two days later Sievier put Randall "up"again and he rode Sceptre as ordered when she won The Oaks with great ease.... In the Autumn, with a different jockey in the saddle she won the last 'classic' the one mile and three quarters St. Leger,run at Doncaster then, as now - when it is overshadowed by the Prix de l'Arc de Triumph. In Bob's day and until the post Second World War domination of the French over the "hostilities" starved the English racing scene, it was the ambition of every owner and/or trainer to win "the Triple Crown" (Two Thousand Guineas, Derby and St. Leger). No one, it seems, considered it feasable to expect a filly to beat the colts at the game. Surely no sportsman would dream of doing anything but his utmost to win, yet the slander of Sievier's perfidy was told and retold as fact from generation to generation and fifty years later in 1952, the coloured illustration on the cover of THE BRITISH RACEHORSE magazine for October was a mare, standing alone in a field. The identification on the "Contents" page, read:

"ILLUSTRATED COVER. The oil painting of Sceptre by G.D. Giles is the property of Major J. Crocker Bulteel, D.S.O., M.C., by whose kind permission it has been reproduced."

The equivalent "Illustrated covers" for the Spring, July and September issues of the same magazine each bore a coloured photograph of some celebrated horse with jockey up in owner's colours and the Contents page explanation for July read:

"ILLUSTRATED COVER. The oil painting of the Duke of Westminister's Flying Fox was painted in 1899 by Allen Sealy and is reproduced by kind permission of Messrs Arthur Ackerman and Son, Old Bond Street, London. Flying Fox, winner of the Triple Crown of 1899, was ridden by Mornington Cannon who is here depicted in the saddle against a background of Epsom racecourse, etc, etc."

One wonders why anyone in 1952 should be interested in an oil painting of Sceptre of seemingly no worth-while recorded history....

Well.... if you had paid 10,000 guineas for a yearling filly, owned and trained her for four years, run her in the five classics, backed her down to favouritism in each and won four of them, would you expect to be labelled a cheat because she failed to be first in the most hazardous of them all ?

Shades of the wickedest of kings - the infanticide Richard Plantagenet!!

I have told this story at length because it was the very first experience I had of the unchanging power of those that "go among them". Sievier's story also tells how one brave man can win some battles even if he cannot win the war. When Bob Sievier was sued for libel by J.B. Joel he stood in the witness box telling the truth and tossing a farthing from one hand to the other.... He was found guilty of the offence but the libelled Joel was awarded "a farthing' damages" and on Bob's emergence from the ordeal the people outside, to the number of two thousand or so, becoming aware of the verdict followed him down Picadilly cheering their appreciation. "The greater the truth, the greater the libel."

Blair, Brown, and the Bank of "England"

by John R. Jeffrey

About Blair: Having succeeded with his brief for a 'Labour' Party changed from being a thorny standard-bearer for 'the red flag of revolution' to the smoothie rose-wearer for the retiring political presence it has become, the Prime Minister with the tooth-paste advert kind of grin is now seen as having that in which he still appears as the senior, and his Chancellor of the Exchequer as a junior lead.... to a U.K. "set up as a limited company".

About Brown: Though dubbed early with the epithet once applied to Bismark.... other than the iron of manly resolve a maleable putty is suggested by Brown's brought-forward capitulation to the financial sector serving the Money Power: a capitulation in the form of giving carte blanche to the Bank of England in the matter of control over both the interest charges on it and the actual creation of money (though less directly and determinedly over that of the other banks). And confirmation of the abrogation of political responsibility is seen in the following statement regarding the said capitulation: "I believe it (the 9 member Bank of England court) has got to be representative of the business and industry sectors." For the latter are - from the accepted wisdom that "the borrower is servant to the lender" - most susceptible (governments apart, "Let me issue and control a nation's money, and I care not who writes the laws." Meyer Amshel Rothschild.)

About the Bank of England: Tucked away in the Tonnage Act 1694, the statutory creation of the said Bank was ostensibly a temporary expedient the main purpose of which was the raising of money for a war against the French. For a condition still existing in the said Act, is that "the said Corporation (the privately-owned Bank of England) shall absolutely cease and determine (i.e. come to an end)" in the event of full redemption of the total debt of 1.2 million pounds, plus interest of 8% varied according to another condition. But the private controllers of the creation of money "out of nothing" (Ref:-ENCYCLOPEDIA BRITANNICA and others) were confident that the condition for closing-down the Bank would never be met. Indeed, despite having to be rescued by Parliament from a 'run' on its gold reserves in 1797 the increasing burden of the National Debt has ensured its survival. Further comment on its fitness to be left to its own devices, on this occasion, I leave entirely to others in the following quotes.

On serious fraud: "The Bank (of England) is very good at being wise after the event.... the Bank is the linchpin of the City establishment (with its) opaque moral ethos.... The link has been to blame for negligence in banking supervision (my emphasis) in the past - namely, BCCI and the secondary banking crisis of 1974 in which it authorised licensed deposit takers who had no right to be in the market at all." SERIOUS FRAUD OFFICE by Brian Widlake.

"The report (by the Bank of England into the collapse of Barings) reflects badly on the Bank of England". (Daily Telegraph editorial).

"I stared at the Bank of England report in astonishment. It wasn't worth the paper it was printed on. It a scandal that they'd written it themselves to themselves". ROGUE TRADER by Nick Leeson.

Or to Put it Another Way.... by R de B.

So now the master usurers of the Bank of England, so-called, are to dictate the rates of interest on any bank loans contracted by small businesses or would be home buyers. It seems like binding with rope the hands of victims already encased in "iron maidens"*. According to Mr. Blair ("call me Tony"), it is now time for the government to "privatise" the Bank of England, so-called, thus giving it control over the rates of interest charged on private loans.

The mind boggles - or, at least - any informed mind should boggle - at the fanciful notion that the "Bank of England" has ever been anything but a private company formed in 1694 for the secret purpose of issuing "notes of hand" masquerading as legal tender charged with whatever interest the makers thereof decided upon as expedient on any given occasion. These time "honoured" transactions are known to the unwitting victims as "the National Debt", and are therefore no concern of theirs as they appear to be wholly unaware of the origin and nature of the monster that holds their country in bondage, thinking it merely a business arrangement solely the responsibility of "the government" their votes have placed "in office" for some indefinite period of not more than five years, when the election process must perforce be repeated so "the Mother of Parliaments" may be seen to be the guarantor of Great Britain's "freedom" under the auspices of the hereditary Monarch - the state presently lauded as "Government by the Queen in Parliament".

....And while we are on the subjects of hushed up history; there is the "little" matter of the British possession of Hong Kong with its teeming population whose present betrayal leaves those citizens with the undoubted right to residential accomodation "at home" in our overcrowded island in the North Sea. How many of them know that Hong Kong was and is a self governing state like Gibraltar? The only "leasehold" in the area was that on the Chinese mainland leased to Britain for 99 years after the second Opium War known since 1898 as "The New Territories", so has or has not Hong Kong been secretly ceded to Communist China? And, if so, does the instrument have the British Sovereign's signature to ratify it? Or is China the receiver of stolen property from the felons who purport to rule us?

Dubious Evidence

Sir - I was sad to see that a Mannheim court has sentenced Gunter Deckert, whom you describe as "one of Germany's most notorious neo-Nazis", to a further two years and three months in jail for "denying the Holocaust" (report, April 12).

Deckert, 57, is a former schoolmaster, city councillor and chairman of the NPD, one of Germany's constitutional political parties. Two years ago two German judges praised his character and motives in the highest terms (which led to their enforced retirement). This latest jail term has been imposed because Deckert chaired a lecture for me in Weinheim in 1990.

When defence lawyers pointed out that the video and audiotapes offered in evidence showed no trace of the incriminating sentence which I was accused of having spoken - nor indeed was it uttered - the public prosecutor held that I had intended to speak it; and that the unfortunate prisoner was mentally aware that I had intended to do so.

All of this results from Germany's law for the suppression of free speech (para 130 of its penal code), which Mr Blair has announced he is eager to introduce here too.

Money Power

There is no proletarian, not even a Communist movement, that has not operated in the interests of money, in the directions indicated by money, and for the time being permitted by money; and that without the idealists among its leadership having the slightest suspicion of the fact.

The Britisches Freikorps

The Fates of the British Waffen-SS Volunteers.

It is a little known fact that a unit of the Waffen (Fighting)-SS was formed, to fight Bolshevism, comprised of British and Commonwealth volunteers. Because of the "sensitivity" of the subject information is understandably difficult to come by. It is known that at least 60, and that possibly as many as 300, men joined the BFC. They wore the 3 Lions of England on their collar patch, a Union Flag shield on their sleeve and the Britisches Freikorps cuff bands.

3 Lions on a Shirt

Some Candour readers may have strong feelings about the actions of these men, what is not in doubt is that many of them were genuinely motivated by a determination to fight Communism and defend our Europe. How many of our people know that Berlin was defended to the death, in 1945, by the Frenchmen of the Charlemagne Division, by Dutchmen, by Norwegians, by Danes, by Estonians, by the the Swiss, our; people, white Europeans; they had nowhere left to go. Their homes were seized or destroyed, their families beaten and ostracised, their girls or wives raped and murdered, while they fought the Bolshevist horror in the last weeks of the war, these horrrors were performed by those tens off thousands who joined the "resistance" around Europe when it very safe to do so. Usually after the 'allies' had arrived!

Since 1976 the American journal SIEGRUNEN, edited by Richard Landwehr, has dedicated itself to the researching and documentation of the history of the Waffen-SS and the European Volunteer Movement of WW II. The following details and pictures are from Issue 63, Spring1997.

1. Frank Axon. Frank Axon was a military driver who was captured in Greece in 1941. He joined the BFC in March 1945 serving with it, and "assisting other German units" on the Eastern front for a period of six weeks. After the war he was sent to prison at hard labour until January 1948.

2. Ronald David Barker. Ronald Barker was an Australian merchant seaman captured at sea in 1941. He allegedly deserted from the BFC while en route to the Oder river Front in 1945. He was sentenced to two years at hard labour.

3. John Beckwith. John Beckwith joined the BFC in 1944 and was captured in Italy in 1945. He was sentenced to three years in prison. Beckwith made news in 1976 by attempting to get the West German government to pay him back wages and damages for the time he spent in prison!

4. Douglas Berneville-Clay. Douglas Berneville-Clay was the only known member of the "elite" British Special Air Service (SAS), to serve in the BFC. His ultimate fate is unknown.

5. Kenneth Edward Berry. Kenneth Berry was a British merchant seaman captured in 1940. After being sent to the 11. SS-Pz.Gr.Div. "Nordland" in March 1945, he fell into Russian captivity during the unit's only battle skirmish. He received only nine months at hard labour after claiming that he had voluntarily surrendered to the Soviets.

ABOVE: SS-Oscha. Thomas Cooper in British Captivity.

6. Thomas Haller Cooper.

The part-German Thomas Cooper was one of the senior NCO's (SS-Oberscharfuhrer) in the BFC. He was quite active in the formation and recruitment of the unit and had been wounded in combat serving with the "Leibstandarte SS Adolf Hitler". As a result, Cooper was sentenced to death by a British military tribunal in 1945. He was given a reprieve in February 1946 when the court took into account his dual loyalties due to his German mother. Cooper was released from prison, (unrepentant!), in 1953 and promptly took off for parts unknown. An expert linguist, it is thought that in recent years he has been a foreign language instructor under an assumed identity in the Orient.

In the last couple of years, the "Nazi-hunters" and the British government have been conducting a search for him as a potential "war criminal". It seems that Cooper had done some barrack room bragging about liquidating some of the "enemy" while on security duty in Poland early in the war. It is not unusual for military/police members to occasionally "spin yarns" like this for the benefit of their junior subordinates. But this was enough for the hate-mongers to jump on Cooper's case. He has now been called "Britain's Greatest Mass-Murderer" and, one of my favourite cliches, "A Cog in the Nazi Death Machine!" It is extremely unlikely that he was either of the above. It is to be hoped he will not be located by the "lynch mob" that is currently going after him!

(Reports indicate that Cooper died some ten years ago in Japan).

7. Reginald Leslie Cornford. Reginald Cornford is though to be the only BFC member to have been killed in action. On 27 April 1945, during the battle for Berlin, Cornford disabled a Soviet tank with a panzerfaust. The tank crew then tracked him down and shot him. Due to his unusual BFC uniform his Soldbuch (identity book) was taken and kept by a Russian officer.

8. Ray Nicholas Courlander. Courlander was a New Zealand Lance-Corporal. He served in the BFC and the SS War Reporter's Regiment "Kurt Eggers". He was captured in full BFC uniform by the British in Brussels, Belgium in September 1945 and was subsequently sentenced to fifteen years in prison.

9. Hugh Wilson Cowie. Cowie was a 27-year old military police private who enlisted in the BFC. He was later sentenced to fifteen years in prison.

10. Frederick Arthur Croft. Croft was an artillery gunner who had been captured in Libya in 1941. After making seven failed escape attempts he decided to join the BFC. He was sent to the 11. SS-Pz.Gr.Div. "Nordland" at Stettin in 1945. In January 1946 he was sentenced to six months detention, (the leniency was apparently due to his many POW escape attempts).

11. Benson Railton Metcalf Freeman. Freeman was an R.A.F. officer pilot who joined the Waffen-SS as a POW and apparently wrote pro-German radio scripts. He was later sent to prison for ten years.

12. John Galaher. Galaher was a 24-year old member of the Canadian Essex Scottish Rgt. who had been captured at Dieppe. His trial was held in secret on "intelligence" grounds even though the war was over. He was sentenced to life in prison.

13. George Hale. Hale was an American citizen born in Vassar, Michigan. He had also been captured at Dieppe while serving with Canadian Essex Scottish Rgt. Hale had a German grandmother and was evidently pro-German in outlook, which was why he joined the BFC. Although a U.S. citizen in a Canadian regiment, the British later sent him to prison for ten years.

14. Dennis John Leister. Leister was a pacifist farm worker on the island of Jersey when the Germans occupied the island in 1940. After working for the occupation forces, he volunteered for the BFC in 1944. He was captured by the Americans in Italy in 1945 and was later sentenced to three years in prison.

15. Francis George McLardy. McLardy was a pharmacist from Liverpool and a Sergeant in the Royal Army Medical Corps. He was captured in 1940 and susequently worked in a POW hospital in Poland. He later sent in a written request to enlist in the Waffen-SS to fight against Bolshevism, so there was no question about his sincerity in this regard. McLardy became one of the founding members of the "Legion of St. George"/"British Free Corps". Later on he joined the SS medical corps and helped with informational broadcasts. He was sentenced to life imprisonment in January 1946. McLardy was eventually released after having served 15 years.

16. Edwin Martin. Martin was another member of the Canadian Essex Scottish Regiment who was captured at Dieppe. He joined the BFC in March 1944 and served as a recruit trainer. After the war he was sentenced to 25 years in prison.

17. Alfred Vivian Minchin. Minchin was another Merchant seaman who became an early member of the "Legion of St.George". He claimed to be instrumental in changing the unit name to the "British Free Corps". He was later sent to prison for 7 years.

18. Eric Pleasants. Eric Pleasants was probably the most colourful member of the BFC. He was born in 1911 in Norfolk and he obtained a degree in physical education and physiotherapy. He worked as a professional wrestler under the name of "Panther" Pleasants and he claimed to have been a physical trainer for members of the royal family. He also served briefly as a "security" man for the British Union of Fascists in Norfolk.. When the war with Germany came he declared himself a pacifist and he was sent to the island of Jersey to engage in farm work.

After the Germans occupied Jersey, Pleasants found himself interned, so he eventually volunteered to serve in the BFC to "improve his diet" among other reasons. He then served as the "physical training" director for the BFC. While stationed at the SS Engineer School at Dresden with the other British volunteers, Pleasants began to represent the school in boxing matches with other SS/Polizei units. In fact he later claimed to have become the "middleweight boxing champion" of the SS! He did continue to engage in exhibition matches until the last months of the war. Pleasants married a German woman and witnessed the fire bombing of Dresden from the outskirts of the city. He was able to survive the battle of Berlin and escaped from that city posing as a Wehrmacht soldier. In the process he killed two Russian soldiers in hand-to-hand combat.

Pleasants then managed to escape to the American lines. He later would consider the American occupation troops to be far more brutal in their treatment of civilians than either the Russians or the Germans! When the Russians assumed control of the American zone in central Germany, Pleasants stayed on working as a "strongman/entertainer". Eventually the Russians became suspicious of him and felt he might be a western spy, so he was sent to the slave labour camp at Vorkuta for seven years. Thanks to his strong constitution, he managed to survive the ordeal. Pleasants later returned to England and lives today in retirement in his native Norfolk.

18. Herbert George Rowlands. At 37 years of age, Rowlands was one of the oldest BFC members. A merchant seaman, he had been a former communist who had fought in the Spanish Civil War. He received two years at hard labour.

19. Henry Alfred Symonds. Symonds was one of the youngest BFC members, joining it at the age of 19 after having been captured in Italy in 1943. He served the last 15 months of the war in the Waffen-SS and the vindictive court that tried him decided that he should be imprisoned one year for every month he had served in the BFC, so he was sentenced to 15 years in prison.

20. John Eric Wilson. Wilson was a British Army commando from Blackpool who was sentenced to 10 years in prison for serving in the BFC.

At least a half-dozen members of the BFC who were identified at a later date were never imprisoned but were given only a "warning". One BFC member escaped to France and was later killed by police while posing as an American soldier. At least three South African and three Australian BFC members were either never tried or never held in prison.The SAS BFC member, Douglas Berneville-Clay was apparently released due to "insufficient evidence", but was later court-martialed on a trumped up charge.

The former SS-Hauptsturmfuhrer (Captain) Hans Roepke, who had commanded the BFC recently summed up the unit's mission: "POW's were asked to help defend Europe against Bolshevism.... I believe that for most, they were not joining an enemy force, but were just trying to get out of camp life or wanted to fight Bolshevism. Like many thousands of volunteers from other European countries, they came to the BFC acting in good faith, and without any interest in National Socialist ideas. The sad fact that they were treated like traitors leaves a mark on those who punished them...."

An excerpt from "The Unity of Christendom"

by Andrei Krylienko

Man proposes, God disposes. Men are free to choose the flag for which they fight but God chooses as freely to whom he gives the victory. Just as families who pray together stay together, so nations, united in prayer, enjoy a stability that sees them through good times and bad. On the other hand, the conversion of the Arabs to the pseudo-religion of Mohammed, a simplified form of Judaism, and the lightning conquests of Islam, would have been impossible if the spiritual defences of Christendom - the strength peoples acquire when they weather life's storms together- had not been neglected, laying the world open to attack by the Dark Powers always lying in wait at the gates of the City of God. The first open betrayal of the Christian ideal took place when the coronation of Charlemagne by the Pope introduced the principle of division into the Empire making an end of the union of all Christians, enjoined on them by Christ Himself when he bade them be One as He and the Father were One.

The division of the Empire was the end of Christendom. The spread of division began with the proliferation of new nations begotten of the strife and rivalries of their rulers, and within individual nations splitting them both vertically and horizontally through the private interests of sectors and classes. When Kings and governments pawned their nation to the Jewish moneylenders who financed their wars and the development of their industry and trade, they gave Jewry, though without formally decreeing it, the freedom of the Christian world. The customs and trade practices of the Jews became a hidden cancer disintegrating Christian society and undermining every authority other than their own. The civilisation the Christian peoples were creating was progressively replaced by the worship of Mammon in a society imbued with science-happy materialism better fitted to the money-making bent of the Jews. Finally, the deification of democracy won the blind support of the masses for the establishment planned to give Jewry once and for all control of the world and possession of its wealth.

Within the Church also the principle of division made headway. Ecclesiastical institutions were infiltrated and subverted; dogma and tradition insidiously corrupted. These developments were largely unnoticed by the rank and file of Catholics despite such consequences as the occupation of the upper echelons of the Vatican hierarchy by Jewry. By the twentieth century the Vatican was so fully invested by Jews that all the popes of the century with one possible exception have been Jews and two of them at least were not only Freemasons as well but also members of B'Nai B'rith, the exclusively Jewish branch of Masonry. As though to nail down the lid of the coffin of the Church, for the last four years of the supposed reign of Paul VI the Pope is said to have been replaced by an imposter. Not even a priest himself, this nonentity nevertheless appointed twenty false cardinals whose participation in subsequent conclaves (if the story is to be believed, and the evidence is convincing. See Kolberg, Der Betrug des Jahrhunderts and Fr John Martinez, The Deception of the Century, 313 17th St. Frederick, OK 73542, U.S.A.) made a valid papal election a virtual impossibility.

One of the most outstanding of the anomalies of the "Conciliar Church" is the so-called New Order of the Mass. The new ritual is not only contrary to tradition, as was pointed out by Cardinals Bacci and Ottaviani at the time it was promulgated but, according to Cardinal Ratzinger, the words of the consecration have been changed, invalidating the most holy of all the Sacraments. Thus the Faithful, unable to tell whether they receive in the Eucharist the Body and Blood of Our Lord or anything more than unchanged bread and water, may have been deprived without knowing it of the only food that gives life everlasting (Saint John 6, 55.). With the spread of Freemasonry among clerics and particularly in the Vatican, they can no longer even be sure their priests have been validly ordained. As though to confirm the demise of the Church, "Pope" John Paul II (Wojtila) in his first encyclical contradicted the basic dogma laid down by Jesus that baptism with water and the Holy Ghost is indispensible for salvation. According to Wojtila, there is no need for a specifically Christian religion, since every one of the four billion men living on earth is, from the moment of his conception, predestined to grace and glory in Jesus Christ.* (Jean Paul II, Redemptor Hominis, last paragraph of section 13, p.52.).

Humanly speaking, therefore, it would seem that Cardinal Lienart was right. If so, as stated above, not only the Church but also civilisation must be written off as lost. Divinely speaking, however, no matter what happens in the Vatican or the outside world, the true Church always has its place in the soul of every Christian who makes Jesus welcome there. While Pius XII was going along with the Vatican Ost-Politik, while Montini (later Paul VI) was betraying Catholic missionaries in the Russian underground to the Soviet authorities and while "leaders" of the Christian world were falling over backwards in their endeavour to compromise with modernist opinion and take the western peoples over with them into the Communist Gehenna, the often unspoken prayers of outcasts and rejects of the world order of the Money Power - inmates of Siberian gulags, victims of Chinese torture and members of the diaspora of the downtrodden and despised throughout the five continents - were answered when Communism, not the Church, collapsed, and the plans of the world government Conspirators had to be changed. The soul of the Christian is the ground from which the Church will never wholly disappear and where Christian revival must begin.

In ages of Faith, monasteries and convents were power-houses drawn on by Providence to supply the discipline, wisdom and good government that civilised the world. The division of the indivisible Empire, the pagan Renaissance, the satanic Revolution, the Napoleonic overthrow of the European order and the confusion typical of the modern world have each in turn reflected and ever more marked recession of Christian piety. As the twentieth century ends, universal decadence and chaos are living proof that nuclear power is no substitute for prayer. The man in the street, betrayed by the ecclesiastical and secular authorities responsible for his wellbeing, would seem doomed to be the plaything of the dark powers fighting each other behind the stalking horse of neo-liberalism for the same unholy empire they failed to obtain with Communism, the same world empire promised them by Mammon twenty centuries ago. The man in the street, the man with no pull or influence in high places or low, the man who is only required to cast a vote as and when directed by the media, should not, however, despair. His darkest hour may well herald a radiant dawn.

Peoples are said to have the rulers they deserve. Judged by this standard, the time is more than ripe to don sackcloth and ashes. As the self-seeking elite appointed by the Money Power to occupy most of the world's high places, bemused by the prospect of a technocratic millenium, it is unlikely to take kindly to penitential garb the task may well fall to the man in the street.

*Nevertheless we have to believe God's promise that "The Gates of Hell shall not prevail" and they have not done so - since it is the papal office which is "the Rock" on which Christ's Church is built so Catholics are under no compulsion to believe the private sayings of possible heretics (even when they occupy the Vatican) if their sayings contradict our already defined Faith.
